

Rabbit and the lion

Once upon time there was a huge lion in the jungle.

He hunted animals indiscriminately for his food.

The animals lived in fear of being hunted by the lion.

One day they all went to lion's cage ...

Majesty you have right of your life. But if you kill us indiscriminately, none of us will live. How will you live in that case.

What is your suggestion ?

King we will send you one healthy animal every morning. You can eat it.
In this way, you can save
us for future.

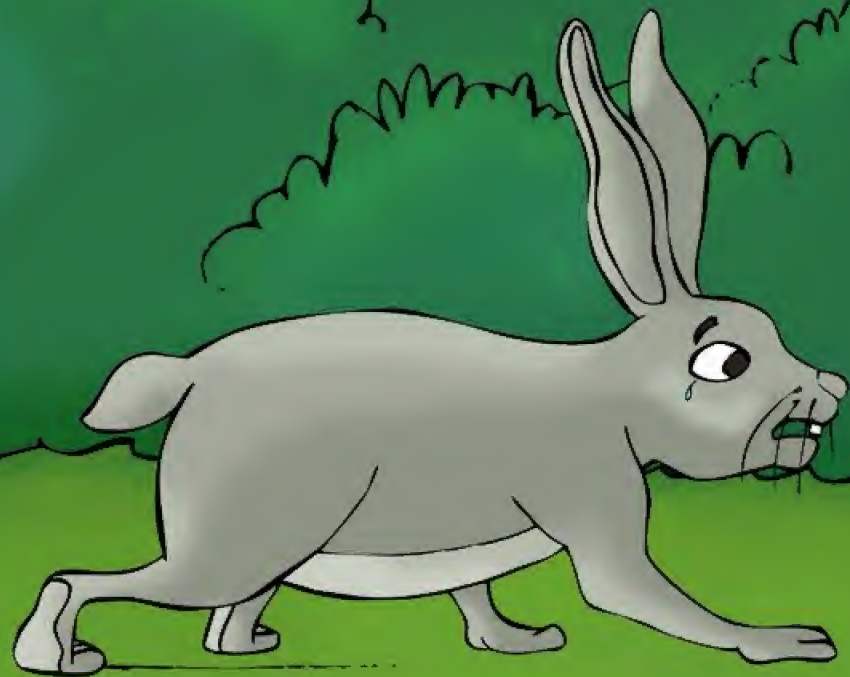

The lion was happy with the idea.

From that day, stag, bull, deer and other animals were sent daily to the lion.

Now it was the turn of rabbit. He walks slowly & reach late.

Lion was very hungry. He said angrily...

I will kill
all animals today.

Oh king! We were six rabbits
for your whole meal but on the way five will eaten away by another lion.

Who dares me?
I am the king of jungle. Take me
to him.

The rabbit took the lion

Here he is!
He is hiding here.
Come and see him.

The lion saw his own reflection...

In a feat of anger, he jumped into the well to kill not realising that it was non other than his own reflection.

...and the lion
drowned to death.

Moral: Anger blinds us. Don't let others provoke you.
